

Fraudulent websites, phone numbers and email addresses to look out for

Suspicious callers

Members of the public may be contacted by people who claim to be from Standard Life, even using legitimate employee names, or they may even also have official sounding names and job titles.

Some examples of names which have been given have actually been previous genuine employees.

Fraudsters will often provide details to give the impression that they are calling on behalf of Standard Life in order to try and make you trust them, and then invest with them. They may try to sell you products, bonds or investments with the promise of financial gain, offer advice over the telephone, or email you links to websites (that are bogus).

The following phone numbers are ones which we believe to be involved in these scams, but fraudsters are constantly changing phone numbers, so this is not an exhaustive list:

- 08008021858

Suspicious emails

Similar to cold calling, fraudsters may contact you by email and they may ask you to provide personal information or identification documents. Be alert for emails where the source of the email is unclear or where the company name or email address may be slightly misspelt, or which contain poor grammar, spelling or punctuation.

Below is an example of a fraudulent e-mail sent to a customer. This includes the genuine Standard Life logo but it is not from the genuine Standard Life email domain.
